A promising life

Kate was born in a small town in Minnesota. She was a bright and compassionate child, and she always dreamed of making a difference in the world. After graduating from high school, Kate attended college, where she studied international relations. She also volunteered at a local soup kitchen and worked with refugees.

After graduating from college, Kate joined the Peace Corps. She was assigned to Togo, a small country in West Africa. Kate was excited to start her new life and help the people of Togo.

Tragedy in Togo

Kate arrived in Togo in the summer of 2015. She was assigned to work in a rural village, where she taught English and helped with community development projects. Kate loved her work, and she quickly made friends in the village.

But in the spring of 2016, tragedy struck. Kate was found dead in her apartment. Her death was ruled a suicide, but her family and friends believe there is more to the story.

Unanswered questions

There are many unanswered questions surrounding Kate's death. Why did she kill herself? Was she under pressure from her superiors? Was she sexually harassed or assaulted?

Kate's family and friends have been trying to get answers to these questions, but they have been met with resistance from the Peace Corps and the Togolese government.

A call for justice

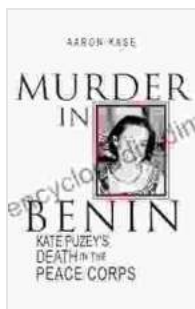

Kate's family and friends are calling for justice. They want to know why she died and who is responsible for her death. They have started a petition demanding an independent investigation into Kate's death.

The Peace Corps has a responsibility to protect its volunteers. Kate's death is a tragedy, and it is important to find out what happened so that it can never happen again.

How you can help

You can help Kate's family and friends get justice by signing the petition demanding an independent investigation into her death. You can also share Kate's story on social media and write to your elected officials.

Kate Puzey was a young woman with a bright future. Her death is a tragedy, but it is also an opportunity to demand change. We must hold the Peace Corps accountable and ensure that its volunteers are safe.
