History of the Temples

The Temples of Khajuraho were built between the 9th and 12th centuries AD by the Chandela kings. During this period, the Chandelas ruled over a large kingdom in central India. They were known for their patronage of the arts, and their temples are some of the finest examples of Hindu architecture in the world.

Architecture of the Temples

The Temples of Khajuraho are built of sandstone, and their walls are adorned with elaborate carvings. The temples are divided into three main groups: the Western Group, the Eastern Group, and the Southern Group. The Western Group is the most popular with tourists, and it contains the most famous temples, including the Kandariya Mahadeva Temple, the Lakshmana Temple, and the Vishvanatha Temple.

The Kandariya Mahadeva Temple is the largest and most impressive of the Khajuraho temples. It is a towering structure with a multi-tiered roof and a profusion of carvings. The Lakshmana Temple is also known for its exquisite carvings, which depict scenes from the Ramayana. The Vishvanatha Temple is one of the oldest temples in Khajuraho, and it is believed to have been built in the 10th century AD.

Carvings of the Temples

The Temples of Khajuraho are famous for their erotic carvings. These carvings depict a wide range of sexual positions, and they have been the subject of much debate and controversy. Some scholars believe that the carvings were intended to teach about the pleasures of love, while others believe that they were meant to ward off evil spirits.

Whatever their intended purpose, the erotic carvings of Khajuraho are a unique and fascinating part of the temple complex. They offer a glimpse into the sexual attitudes of the Chandela people, and they continue to intrigue visitors from all over the world.

Visiting the Temples

The Temples of Khajuraho are open to visitors every day of the week. The best time to visit is during the shoulder seasons (April-May and September-October), when the weather is pleasant and there are fewer crowds.

However, the temples are also worth visiting during the monsoon season (June-August), when the surrounding landscape is lush and green.

There are a number of ways to get to Khajuraho. The nearest airport is in Jabalpur, which is about 170 kilometers from Khajuraho. You can also take a train to Khajuraho from Delhi or Mumbai. Once you arrive in Khajuraho, you can hire a taxi or rickshaw to take you to the temples.

There is a small entrance fee to enter the temple complex. Once inside, you can explore the temples at your own pace. There are also a number of guided tours available, which can provide you with more information about the history and architecture of the temples.

Where to Stay

There are a number of hotels and guesthouses in Khajuraho. The most popular hotels are located near the Western Group of Temples. However, there are also a number of budget-friendly options available. Here are a few of the most recommended places to stay in Khajuraho:
