

The Adventures and Wisdom of One of America's Most Renowned Horsemen

Tom Dorrance was one of the most influential horsemen in American history. He developed a method of horse training that is now known as natural horsemanship. This method is based on the principles of observation, patience, and respect for the horse.

Dorrance was born in 1910 in Sherman, Texas. He grew up on a ranch and began riding horses at a young age. He was a natural horseman, and he quickly developed a reputation for his ability to train horses. In the 1940s, Dorrance began to develop his own method of horse training. He called this method "feel." Feel is based on the idea that the horse is a sentient being that can be communicated with through body language and energy.
