The Journey

The Arctic Prairies canoe journey began in the small town of Tuktoyaktuk, Northwest Territories. From there, the two adventurers paddled their canoe up the Mackenzie River, one of the longest rivers in North America. They then crossed the Arctic Circle and entered the vast expanse of the Arctic Prairies.

The Arctic Prairies are a unique ecosystem that is home to a wide variety of wildlife, including caribou, wolves, bears, and moose. The landscape is dominated by rolling hills and tundra, and the climate is harsh and unforgiving. The two adventurers faced numerous challenges during their journey, including strong winds, cold temperatures, and treacherous rapids.

But they also witnessed the incredible beauty of the Arctic wilderness. They saw caribou herds numbering in the thousands, and they marveled at the vast expanse of the tundra. They also learned about the importance of conservation and the need to protect the Arctic ecosystem.

The Caribou

The caribou is a large, hoofed mammal that is native to the Arctic. Caribou are migratory animals, and they travel long distances in search of food and shelter. The two adventurers followed the caribou herds as they migrated across the Arctic Prairies.

Caribou are an important part of the Arctic ecosystem. They provide food for wolves, bears, and other predators. They also help to fertilize the tundra and create habitat for other wildlife.

But the caribou is facing a number of threats, including climate change, habitat loss, and hunting. The two adventurers witnessed the impact of these threats firsthand. They saw caribou herds that were smaller than they had been in the past, and they saw caribou that were struggling to find food and shelter.

The Importance of Conservation

The Arctic Prairies canoe journey was a life-changing experience for the two adventurers. They learned about the importance of conservation and the need to protect the Arctic ecosystem. They also learned about the resilience of the caribou and the importance of preserving their habitat.
