I was twenty-six years old when I was diagnosed with a terminal illness. I had just graduated from college, started my dream job, and was planning my wedding. My life was just beginning, and then it was over.

I was given six months to live.

At first, I was angry. Why me? Why now? I had so much to live for. I had so many plans. I wasn't ready to die.

But as I started to process my diagnosis, I began to realize that I had a choice. I could spend the rest of my days feeling sorry for myself, or I could make the most of the time I had left.

I chose to live.

I spent the next six months traveling, spending time with my loved ones, and writing. I wanted to make sure that I made the most of every moment.

I also started to think about what would happen to me after I died. I had always been a spiritual person, but I had never really thought about what would happen when I died.

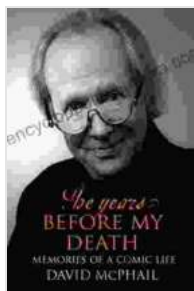

As I started to explore my spirituality, I began to feel more at peace with my own mortality. I realized that death is not the end. It is simply a transition to another realm of existence.

I also came to understand that the most important thing in life is love. Love is what connects us to each other and to the divine. Love is what gives life meaning.

In the years before my death, I learned a lot about life, love, and death. I learned that life is precious and that it should be cherished. I learned that love is the most powerful force in the universe. And I learned that death is not the end.

I am now at peace with my own mortality. I know that I will die someday, but I am not afraid. I know that I will be surrounded by love, both in this life and in the next.

The Years Before My Death is a story of loss, love, and the afterlife. It is a story about how one woman faced her own mortality and found peace. I hope that my story will inspire others to live their lives to the fullest and to embrace the power of love.
